LUXURY GOODS FOCUS

- 12 Caviar cast-offs have value VESLIC's Dr Alois Püntener explains how artisan tanners have begun to make more of the sturgeon skins unwanted by the caviar industry.
- 16 Swim with the tide Good looks and good physical properties are convincing more shoe designers to put fish leather into their high-end footwear collections.
- 18 Beamhouse breakthrough Improved soaking action and better unhairing are the big benefits of a new beamhouse processing system jointly developed by Lanxess and Novozymes.
- 24 Less is more A new system from Union Chemicals could provide a method for upgrading the quality of crust and for reducing the amount of finishing required.
- 27 A level playing field Dye levelness is crucial in high-value aniline and semi-aniline leathers destined to be made into luxury goods. Taiwanese firm Everlight believes it can help.
- 34 New opportunities in exotic leather Exotic leather for handbags, especially crocodile, is highly popular in the luxury market. Ostrich-leather expert Frik Kriek believes new possibilities exist for the wider exotic leather sector as fashion brands seek to broaden their exotic offering.
- 37 Sustainable leather Big fashion houses increasingly want to emphasise the sustainability of their operations. Australian industry consultant Catherine Money offers her personal view of the sustainability of leather.
- 44 Touch of class Italian leather chemicals provider Fenice has developed a technique allowing tanners to apply a delicate finish to the leather edge. This touch can enhance the look of high-end leather bags.
- 47 In short supply Top luxury leathers goods brands demand more from their tanners than a simple supply of leather. Tanning industry suppliers Antonio Battaglia from Silvateam and Diego Cisco from GSC Group give their views on why Italian tanners are able to respond so well.

BEAST TO BEAUTY

- 50 Royal appointment Luxury leathers goods brand Ettinger London has royalty among its customers, but this provides no exemption from the battle to source the best-quality leather made from high-end hides from its tanning industry suppliers.

SPECIAL REPORT

- 54 Beast to Beauty Conference A round-up of the presentations and discussions that took place at the fourth Beast to Beauty conference, in Northampton in June, with a debate on carbon footprint as the main feature.
