Europe against the people?

Iran Its nuclear ambitions must be stopped: but Israel bombing it is not the right answer, leader, page 16. A game-changing report by the UN's nuclear watchdog could be the prelude to an Israeli strike on Iran, page 53

The battle for the South The president tries to shore up his fragile electoral gains in a region that is getting ever more Republican, page 35. An alternative strategy for the Democrats: Lexington page 42

Britain's elected mayors The plans to unleash more Boris Johnsons point in the right direction, but are too timid: leader, page 18. The country's few elected mayors have, by and large, worked well. But that doesn't mean other cities will vote for them, page 63

South Korea's economy

To outsiders, the country's heroic ascent is a template for success. But now it has almost caught up with the developed world it must change its approach, pages 79-81. China's state-owned enterprises are on the march, page 71

Airline alliances Regulators have been too soft on the big transatlantic carriers. It is time to toughen up: leader, page 14. Three alliances cover most of the world—where do they go next? Page 76

Dino dining Even in their heyday, dinosaurs were not quite as dominant as popular myth makes them out to be, page 93
